NATIONAL Vocational Qualification (NVQ) Framework was introduced to Sri Lanka in 2004. National Vocational Qualifications are clearly explained in the National Skills / Competency Standards and these Standards are made up of one or more competency units. The training institutions, which are registered and obtained provisional registration status from the TVEC, are eligible to apply for accreditation to offer NVQ certificates.

The key objective of introducing accreditation of TVET courses is to uphold high standard of quality and relevance of the programme conducted by registered training institutions in Sri Lanka.

Accreditation is considered as a quality assurance measure and a useful management tool for continuous improvement of a training course or training institution. Therefore, it is considered to be one of the primary methods for maintaining and improving standards of education and training. Accreditation is a process whereby a professional organization or a government agency grants recognition to an educational institution for demonstrated ability in a special area of practice or training. Each course seeking accreditation is evaluated in relation to competency unit specified in the National Skills / Competency Standards.

Assessment for accreditation is done by panel of assessors comprised of a trade expert and a representative of the TVEC. Accreditation certificates are awarded to the institutions when the panel of assessors recommended to course for accreditation and after the Commission approval is obtained.
